Let me say this, I do not like Indian food. I've tried various places and it's too spicy for me due to my super tastiness. I am writing this review based on friends reaction and just general restaurant observations.

Note also, I've only been for their lunch buffet. Which is amazing for $6.95.

It gets five stars for....

cleanliness,- even for a buffet, it was IMMACULATE.

variety - there are almost a dozen meal options to choose from making it a great place for picky eaters and first times. I've been twice and both times the options were completely different.

quality of ingredients/food - It is not greasy or too saucy. the meats are cooked to perfection.

service - tons of pan and water!

decor - it's adorable and a little fancy.

drink options - wine, beer, soda, and juice options.

I was even able to enjoy some of the less spicy items - I really like their spinach soup.

My friends were incredibly impressed with it and ate plates upon plates of food.

So I will admit that I've been missing Indian food, and in a way, I wish I'd tried the much-lauded lunch buffet first, just so I could have tried a wider selection of things. However, I went on a double date with three people who were all at least somewhat regular visitors, and thus I was given excellent recommendations. Maybe we weren't the most experimental in our selections, as we basically just got double of chicken tikka masala and saag paneer, as well as two spinach soups. But other than the fact that originality wasn't our strong suit, it was a very good, and very enjoyable meal. The food itself is rich and thick and very creamy, so you're definitely not going to leave with any semblance of hunger remaining. The portions are generous enough to take home some, although not as huge as many Indian places I have been.

It's true that the space of the restaurant is a might petite. If you're going at a peak time on the weekend, I would recommend calling ahead for a reservation. Also, the service is a little slow and not the most organized. But if you can forgive them those sins, neither of which is impossible to manage, then it's worth a trip.
